From lived experience to lasting systems

Basma Alawee is a refugee-rights leader, strategist and speaker who turns lived experience of displacement into policy and programmes that work. What sets her apart is that she has done this work from both sides: as someone who lived it, and as an executive who ran it at national scale.

This is a name-led identity. Basma herself is the brand, so the logo is her name, and the identity is carried by typography, colour and photography rather than a symbol.

PRINCIPLES

Four traits, each with a visual rule

Grounded

Real stories, real photography of real moments. No stock, no symbolic illustrations

Intentional

Numbers and specifics over adjectives. Clear hierarchy in design layouts and type.

Generous

Credits where due, and open space and room for people’s faces, words and impacts.

Concise

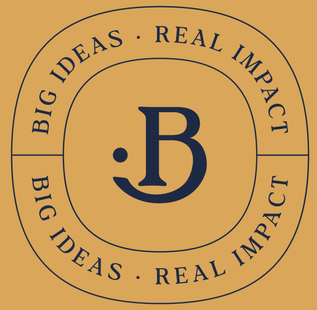

Calm and confident, few colors, good contrast and clear communication.

GRAPHIC DEVICE

The doorway, one continuous form

Nested round arches that grow outward from a single small doorway like a ripple from the innermost door to the outer arch.

It can fill a whole surface, as on the cover page, sit contained in a panel, or hold photography as a container shape using one of the arch.
